Los Angeles maintains one of the tightest industrial markets in the nation, with vacancy rates holding below 6% despite elevated interest rates. The West Washington Boulevard corridor — stretching between Downtown LA and the Westside — has emerged as a prime target for owner-users, investors, and developers seeking value-add opportunities in infill locations.

Strong owner-user activity continues to drive demand, with SBA 504 and conventional financing readily available. The aerospace, defense, and advanced manufacturing sectors continue to expand their Los Angeles footprint, further tightening supply for functional industrial properties with heavy power and high ceilings.

The Opportunity Zone program has been made permanent via the One Big Beautiful Bill Act signed July 4, 2025, ensuring long-term policy stability for qualified investors. The Washington Boulevard corridor sits within one of 193 designated Opportunity Zones in Los Angeles County.

Neighborhood revitalization is accelerating, evidenced by a new 64-unit residential development directly across the street from the subject property. Proximity to USC, DTLA, and the Expo Line creates a robust demand base for commercial, industrial, and mixed-use development.
