Couche-Tard Targets Earnings, Revenue Growth With Strategy Push

ROBB M. STEWART, FEBRUARY 11, 2026 (MORNING STAR)

Alimentation Couche-Tard plans to focus on strengthening its core platforms, which includes chasing targeted investment opportunities, in an effort to drive longer-term growth.

The Canadian convenience-store giant, which last year failed to clinch an attempted $47 billion acquisition of 7-Eleven parent Seven & i, on Wednesday unveiled a strategy dubbed Core + More that aims to position Couche-Tard to win over customers in the years to come.

The push is projected to drive year-over-year adjusted earnings-per-share growth of 10% or more from fiscal 2026 through 2030 and comparable same-store merchandise revenue expansion of between 2% and 3%, the company said. It said it expects total merchandise and service revenue over the period to grow 4% to 5% a year, while adjusted earnings before interest, taxes and depreciation and amortization is anticipated to rise 6% to 8%.

Highlights continued expansion and earnings growth initiatives.

For fiscal 2026, the company said it expects free cash flow of more than $2.5 billion.

"This strategy is about turning the full power of our scale, network and people into greater value for our shareholders," President and Chief Executive Alex Miller said.

Couche-Tard operates in 29 countries and territories, with more than 17,300 stores, of which about 13,200 sell gasoline and transportation fuel.

"We believe we have the right recipe to support profitable growth, with targets that are calibrated, measurable, and well understood across the organization," said Chief Financial Officer Filipe Da Silva.
