“The area's resurgence largely began with Warner Music Group, which signed a lease three years ago to move from Burbank to 257,000 square feet at the former Ford building at 777 S. Santa Fe Ave. That lease was the largest office lease in Los Angeles in several years when it was signed in 2016, according to CoStar Market Analytics. After that, Spotify signed a 10-year lease to move into 110,000 square feet in the At Mateo development nearby. Other companies that have moved or announced plans to open offices in the Arts District in recent months are helping to attract even more businesses to the area. [Recently, Warner Music Group went ahead to purchase the Ford building and an adjacent property at a well above market price per square foot].

Recently, Honey announced plans to take up all 130,000 square feet of the refurbished Fourth and Traction building, at 963 E. Fourth St., which was originally built by the Coca-Cola company. The company is scheduled to begin its move in June of this year. TubeScience, which creates video ads for use on social media platforms, is significantly expanding into 103,796 square feet at 655 S. Santa Fe Ave., a two-story flex facility on a 2.3-acre lot owned by the Park family of backpack and bag company Everest Trading Corp”. -Costar Group
